Race organizers may, at their discretion, measure crafts to ensure they fit within specifications.

3.2 Canoe Class Specifications

While all canoes are allowed in the K20, they are subdivided into classes by design which follow OMCKRA canoe specification rules for C1 and C2 classes; consistent with those set by both Canoe Kayak Canada and the US Canoe Association (USCA). Canoes cannot have skegs or rudders and must be raced using canoe single bladed paddles. Pro C2s and USCA C1s may only register in the Competitive division while Stock C2s and C1s can register in either Adventure or Competitive divisions. Canoes that do not meet the following specifications must register under the “Unlimited” class.

At these lock stations racers must provide their team number to the attending officials for timekeeping.

Lock station facilities are shared with other user groups such as pleasure boaters. Racers must be aware of possible boat wash and significant activity around lock stations, particularly during the day.

Racers must obey the instructions from safety guides posted at major road crossings. As deemed necessary, safety guides may require you to wait before crossing the road. Penalties will be assigned to teams who do not follow safety guide instructions. Necessary precautions must be taken when crossing other minor roads at various lock stations.

Portaging assistance may be provided for some paddlers as described in section 6.6 of this document.

6.5 Support

The Kingston to Ottawa (K2O) 200 is a supported canoe marathon. Racers can have a support team to provide food, drinks, medicine, clothing, ice, or other items which they require. Support teams can provide support from all lock stations and sites that are accessible to the public.

Non-registered boats, including motorboats, cannot follow, lead or be used for providing assistance to any racer throughout the race.

Portaging Support for Adventure Class - Support crews can provide portaging assistance to all Adventure Class racers. This includes lifting the craft out of the water, portaging it around the lock station, and putting the craft back in the water. Portaging devices (e.g. portaging trailers) are allowed to be used by Adventure class racers and their support crews.

Portaging Support for Competitive Class - Assistance of any form which would help the progress of a craft on the race course, including but not limited to, portaging, lifting a craft out of water, pushing or pulling a craft are not permitted. Assistance in holding the craft for the purpose of stabilizing the boat is permitted. While support crews may bring portaging trailers for competitive racers, they may not assist in lifting or tying down the craft. The only exceptions to these rules are at Old Slys and Long Island lock stations where portaging assistance may be provided due to increased difficulty in navigating the terrain.
